POPE PIUS X DIES AFTER ILLNESS OF FOUR DAYS

Pontiff's Demise Hastened by Grief Over the War Between European Nations

CARDINALS CALLED TO ELECT SUCCESSOR

The Dead Pope Was a Simple Mannered Man, Who Regarded His Elevation to the Papacy as a Burden—Was Born a Peasant and Received His Education Under Great Difficulties and Hardships—End Follows a Relapse.

(By International News Service)
Rome, Aug. 20.—Pope Pius X died at 1.20 o'clock this morning. The passing of the supreme pontiff of the Roman Catholic church was not unexpected. From about noon yesterday he had been unconscious and steadily growing weaker, and official bulletins had prepared the church for the worst.

He had realized his condition in the early morning yesterday, when he said farewell to his sisters and his brother and laid his last injunction upon Cardinal Merry del Val, the papal secretary of state.

Cause of His Death.
Death was due to his ancient enemy bronchial catarrh, which became acute on Sunday. The attacks which he fought off a year ago returned to find him overwrought with grief inspired by the great European war.

The vitality with which he fought former attacks had been absorbed in his prayers and meditations for peace. The assistance he once rendered his physicians was lacking, as he forgot himself, and thought only of the catastrophe which the world is facing.

Was Taken Ill Sunday.
Renewed manifestations of his ancient illness, bronchial catarrh and gout, confined him to his bed Sunday morning. It was thought then the attack would respond to treatment as before, but when it did not Doctor Marchisavi summoned specialists to a consultation. The ancient hopeful spirit of the patient was missing this time.

The European war weighed heavily on his mind and heart, and he could do nothing. The fever increased during Tuesday and later he could not retain nourishment. Liquids were administered during the afternoon of Tuesday, but he would only shake his head. It was not thought he suffered any pain, but that he was extremely weak he himself testified.

Personal Family Summoned.
With yesterday, after a ceaseless all-night vigil of physicians it was admitted that the condition of the pope was critical. It was thought best to summon his personal family, his two sisters in a nearby convent and his brother, Joseph Sarto, to his bedside. At the same time word was sent out to all cardinals who had left Rome that the supreme pontiff was gravely ill.

Joseph Sarto, the brother, was admitted to the bedside before 8 o'clock yesterday morning, and a little later the sisters arrived, all to depart weeping. Then came Cardinal Merry del Val, papal secretary of state. Even the physicians and the nurses withdrew at this conference, which was in absolute secret.

It is believed then that the pope told Cardinal Del Val that he was about to die, for the visitor emerged from the sick room weeping and im-

POPE PIUS X DIES AFTER A BRIEF ILLNESS

Rome, Aug. 20.—Pope Pius X, whose death occurred last evening, was the victim of bronchial catarrh and gout. He died after an illness of only four days, his end being hastened, it is believed, by worry over the war in Europe.

Borough council met in regular session last evening. In the absence of President Kerr, Mr. Beahan was chosen to preside, while Mr. Fletcher acted as secretary.

The committee reported favorably the proposition to pave the alley between Pine and Locust streets, between Second and Front streets, but council decided that it could not act in the matter until the abutting property owners have entered into an agreement to pay their share of the cost of the work.

An ordinance providing for the construction of a sewer in Pine street, from that street's intersection at Fourth street, to Cemetery road, was passed.

The bond given by Amos Hess, indemnifying the borough against possible damage through the abandonment of the sewer, was accepted.

THE A. O. H. ADJOURNS ON DEATH OF POPE

The state convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and Ladies auxiliary, being held at DuBois, adjourned yesterday afternoon immediately on receiving a report of the death of Pope Pius X. Resolutions of condolence were passed and a cablegram was sent to Cardinal Merry Del Val.

At the morning session yesterday the nomination of officers took place. There are no contests, excepting for state president, P. A. Kilgallen, of Allegheny county, and Dr. John A. Farrell, of Chester county, having received the nominations. The remainder of the ticket is as follows:

Vice president, John Campion, of Schuylkill county; secretary, John O'Dea, of Philadelphia; treasurer, John B. Boyle, of Luzerne.

The secretary's report shows there are 451 divisions in Pennsylvania, leading all the states, with a membership of 37,088, an increase of more than 5000 under the present administration.

London, Aug. 20.—There are contradictory reports of the fall of Brussels, but it is expected that the Germans will occupy the capital in a few hours.

The French and British ministers have fled from Brussels. The German losses at Louvain were heavy, owing to their desperate and heroic charging.

Germans and British in Battle.
The Germans, after capturing Louvain, the Belgian headquarters, began a general onslaught, engaging the British somewhere near Namur.

London, Aug. 20.—An official dispatch from Berlin via Rotterdam states that Germany has rejected Japan's ultimatum for the surrender of Kiao-Chau.

A Terrible Bombardment.
Brussels, Aug. 20.—Before withdrawing from Louvain the Belgians gallantly withstood a terrible bombardment. The Germans, with a heavy supporting artillery, overwhelmed the Belgians from three sides. The Uhlans cut down the stragglers retreating. The Belgian machine guns felled the Germans in groups in the roadways and the fields were choked with the dead and wounded.

Germans Irresistible.
The Germans undismayed leaped and bounded over their dead comrades going into a final bayonet charge with an electrifying and exultant cry of victory. The German artillery was fearfully accurate, the shells bursting in the trenches. Belgian courage was incomparable. Riderless horses trampled the dead and wounded alike, all being mixed in an inextricable mass.

Belgian officers insist the retreat was "strategic."

The Belgians are falling back on Antwerp. The troops here are evacuating the city.

Paris, Aug. 20.—It is officially announced that the Germans are advancing towards France, east of Namur and have reached a line between Dinnant and Neufchateau. The latter is 25 miles from the famous city of Sedan. These troops are believed to constitute the center of the German main army.

LAJOIE BEING KNOCKED BY MANAGER OF NAPS

BY FRANK G. MENKE.
(SPECIAL TO THE PROGRESS)

New York, Aug. 20.—There are few fans in the country today who can believe the charges brought by Manager Joe Birmingham of the Naps that Larry Lajoie has laid down on him—that the great Frenchman has not given the club the best that was in him.

Those who know Lajoie personally and those who know him only through his record as a ball player cannot believe that Birmingham's charges are founded on fact. For eighteen years Lajoie has been in big league baseball and during all those years he has been a credit and an honor to the game. For eighteen years not a breath of scandal has fluttered about his name.

And now comes Birmingham, disfrustrated and angered because he is the leader of a tail end team and attempts to blacken the name of a man who has done a hundred times more baseball than he ever has done or ever will do, and whose memory will live and be cherished for decades after Birmingham's has been forgotten.

Does Birmingham wish to get rid of Lajoie because he fears that the veteran second baseman may supplant him as manager? There are some who feel that this might be the underlying cause for Birmingham's charges against the veteran. Several months ago a report was current that such a change would take place. Birmingham is said to have a contract that still has two years to run, but managers are not always retained for the full length of their contract.

None of those who know the great Frenchman intimately can believe for one moment that he would deliberately plot against and man Lajoie stacks up as a man, clean and straight, and one who had given the best that is in him to his superiors for 18 years. Certain it seems that now, in the twilight of his wonderful career, he could not change his nature; and he would not sully his name by any quitting tactics.

Lajoie has not been hitting them out this year. His batting has been woefully weak. But there has been nothing wrong with his fielding, nothing wrong with his throwing. He still is, despite his 39 years, the most graceful fielder in the game, and he still ranks as one of the greatest defensive players in the big leagues.

If Birmingham bases his charges against Lajoie on the fact that he isn't hitting, it would seem that Lajoie is being treated unjustly. Lajoie has been in a slump and batting slumps come frequently in the careers of even the most wonderful and most consistent sluggers. This isn't the first batting slump that Lajoie has encountered. Back in 1907 and 1908 the best he could do was .299 and .289. The general verdict then was—"He's through." Lajoie upset the dope by coming back in 1909 with .324, in 1910 with .384, 365 in 1911, 368 in 1912 and .335 in 1913.

This year Lajoie hasn't been able to hit them for better than about .223. His grand average covering all the other years of his careers is .351—the best average ever compiled by anyone over such a lengthy stretch. It's a wonderful record and one no doubt that brought to Lajoie a feeling of pride.

SILK HAT HARRY'S DIVORCE SUIT

BY TAD

An average of .223 for this season will tear Lajoie's general average down something like 8 or 9 points. Bringing him down to around .342 it still remains a wonderful record but not such a seemingly unbeatable one as .351. Does anyone think that Lajoie deliberately would lay down in his hitting, knowing full well that such an act would rob him in the final years of his baseball career of the honor of retiring with a grand average better than any batsman ever made before?

Lajoie, during the ten years or so of his connection with the Cleveland club has made thousands of intimate friends there. He has made thousands of intimate friends along the circuit. And he has millions of admirers. Does anyone think that Lajoie would do anything that would cause him the loss of those friendships, lose for him the admiration that millions have?

On the face of things it looks as if Birmingham's charges, if correctly quoted, are without foundation.

The Trey O' Hearts

If you've got a drop of red blood in your veins—if your heart beats one bit faster to the tune of romance—adventure—love and mystery—then you've something in store so far ahead of anything you've ever seen that you will never forget.

The Pictures The Universal Film Manufacturing Co., pronounced THE TREY O' HEARTS the best action story for film purposes they had seen in three years. They backed up their judgment by putting the punch and $200,000 cash into a set of pictures that are more than remarkable—they're simply extraordinary.

Won't Cost You One Red Penny You attend the movies—regularly. Instead of an ordinary film, you'll see graphically pictured by the best emotional actors and actresses in America—THE TREY O' HEARTS—a pace maker in pictures. So it won't cost you a nickel more to see it.

Mental Back Somersaults No matter how clever, you can't fathom the plot of THE TREY O' HEARTS one inch ahead of the scene you're viewing. It keeps you turning mental back somersaults all the way.

Full Reel Action in Every Foot The Universal Film Manufacturing Co., who are producing these films tell us that there is more action in every foot of THE TREY O' HEARTS than in a full reel of the ordinary scenario. And they should know. Thousands of scenarios go through their hands every year and they're investing $200,000 in putting THE TREY O' HEARTS on the screen. That's backing judgment. And their success in the moving picture business tells whether or not they know a good thing when they see it.

¶ "THE CASE OF JENNIE BRICE" will be run in a liberal installment each day, and "THE TREY O' HEARTS" will appear on every Monday and Wednesday—Three full columns on each of these two days, and will also be run in pictures at the NEW OPERA HOUSE Wednesday Evening's.

WOMEN ON THE FIELD OF BATTLE

Hungarian Females Follow the Men to Armed Camps

ARE BRAVE AND FEARLESS

Story of How the Wife of a Hungarian Chief Repelled an Attack on Fort Egri by a Band of Turks—Ideal Equality of Sexes in That Country.

(By International News Service)

Budapest, Hungary, Aug. 20. Women will be seen on the battlefields of Europe, if the fighting between Austria-Hungary and Serbia and Russia becomes general. Since the men of Hungary have been called to the war the women of that kingdom not only are protecting the homes, but many of them have followed the men to the armed camps.

The women of Hungary are brave and fearless. They say that if necessary they will fight again, just as they did in the revolution of 1848, when they went to the front as officers and soldiers, and stood shoulder to shoulder with their husbands, fathers and brothers.

One of the favorite stories which Hungarian women tell again and again to their children, is that of the capture of Fort Egri and how Dobo Katka, the wife of the chief whose territory was being besieged by the Turks, led the women against the invaders.

She rode out into the center of the town, and called the women together, asking them in the name of their country to arm themselves and follow her. They all disappeared on the instant, and Dobo Katka was afraid for a while they were not brave or patriotic enough to fight. But soon they returned, armed with pitchforks, clubs and stones, and followed her to where the Turks were climbing up a rope ladder to the fort, which stood on a cliff.

The women heated tar in pitchers and poured the boiling stuff down on the Turks, also pelting them with the stones and jabbing them with the pitchforks. Dobo Katka climbed halfway down the ladder, and took the red flag from the hands of the Turks.

In every war in which Hungary has been engaged, the women of every class, high and low, rich and poor, are treated with respect and equality. Men consult their wives on business deals. Husband and wife are equal partners in their possessions.

Because of this practice, the women feel as much patriotism as the men. The Hungarian women perhaps are more loyal to their country, than the women of any other nation, because they feel an equality with the men. That is why they fight.

It is not only possible, but highly probable, that if the Hungarian soldiers are drawn into the present war have had no time to want the ballot, to fight for Austria, their women will be found on the battlefield, fighting with their husbands and brothers.

Hungary is one of the nations of Europe where there is no movement for equal suffrage. The women have long been used to absolute equality in the home, in business and in industrial affairs, that apparently they had no time to want the ballot.

WOODLAND YOUNG MAN SURE HE SAW ROBBERS.

Preston Parks, returning to his home in Woodland at an early hour Sunday morning, after spending a pleasant evening at a citizen's home in that place, discovered what he supposed to be a robber at Mr. Pickles' grocery store, in Lower Woodland. Preston aroused a few neighbors and they investigated and found an automobile with lights all out except one, which was burning very low and would flash about every second out into the road. It sure resembled a burglar's flashlight, but it wasn't. When a young man is calling on his best girl with his auto he should be sure to turn out all the lights and avoid arousing the neighborhood at an early hour in the morning.

CLEARFIELD FIREMEN GO TO PATTON CONVENTION.

The members of the Clearfield fire department and a number of citizens left on the morning train over the New York Central for Patton, where the three-day convention began this morning. The fire ladders of the town were headed by the Fifth Regiment band.

The sessions of the convention are expected to be very interesting, and the fire fighters anticipate a delightful time in Patton, whose citizens made every preparation for their reception and entertainment.

Clearfield was a candidate for the convention next year, but it now looks as if the firemen of the district will vote in favor of going to Philipsburg in 1915.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's old Favorite Remedy of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everybody knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

THE CASE OF JENNIE BRICE

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

I reached over to lift him a clout on the head, but I did not. The sunlight was coming in through the window at the top of the stairs, and shining on the rope that was tied to the banister. The end of the rope was covered with stains, bright with a glint of red in them.

I got up shivering. "You can get the meat at the butcher's, Terry," I said, "and come back for me in half an hour." Then I turned and went upstairs, weak in the knees, to put on my hat and coat. I had made up my mind that there had been murder done.

I looked at my clock as I went downstairs. It was just 12:30. I thought of telephoning for Mr. Reynolds to meet me, but it was his lunch hour, and besides, I was afraid to telephone from the house while Mr. Ladley was in it.

Peter had been whining again. When I came down the stairs he had stopped whimpering and was wagging his tail. A strange boat had put into the wharf and was coming back.

"Now, old boy!" somebody was saying from the boat. "Steady, old chap! I've got something for you!"

A little man, elderly and alert, was standing up in the boat, poling it along with an oar. Peter gave vent to joyful yelps. The elderly gentleman brought his boat to a stop at the foot of the stairs and, reaching down into a tub at his feet, held up a large piece of raw liver. Peter almost went crazy, and I remember suddenly that I had forgotten to feed the poor beast for more than a day.

"Would you like it?" asked the gentleman. Peter sat up, as he had been taught to do, and barked. The gentleman reached down again, got a wooden platter from a stack of them at his feet and, placing the liver on it, put it on the step. The whole thing was so neat and businesslike that I could only gaze.

"That's a well trained dog, madam," said the elderly gentleman, beaming at Peter over his glasses. "You should not have neglected him."

"The food put him out of my mind," I explained, humbly enough, for I was ashamed.

"Exactly. Do you know how many starving dogs and cats I have found this morning?" He took a notebook out of his pocket and glanced at it. "Forty-eight! Forty-eight, madam! And ninety-three cats! I have found them marooned in trees, clinging to fences, floating on barrels, and I have found them in comfortable houses where there was no excuse for their neglect. Well, I must be moving on. I have the report of a cat with a new litter in the loft of a stable near here."

He wiped his hands carefully on a fresh paper napkin, of which also a heap rested on one of the seats of the boat, and picked up an oar, smiling benevolently at Peter. "Then suddenly he bent over and looked at the stained rope and tied to the stair rail."

"What's that?" he said.

"That's what I'm going to find out," I replied. I glanced up at the Ladleys' door, but it was closed.

The little man dropped his oar and, fumbling in his pockets, pulled out a small magnifying glass. He bent over, holding to the rail, and inspected the stains with the glass. I had taken a fancy to him at once, and in spite of my excitement I had to smile a little.

"Humph," he said and looked up at me; "that's blood! Why did you cut the boat loose?"

"I didn't," I said. "If that is blood I want to know how it got there. That was a new rope last night!" I glanced at the Ladleys' door again, and he followed my eyes.

"I wonder," he said, raising his voice a little. "If I come into your kitchen if you will allow me to fry a little of that liver. There's a wretched Maltese in a tree at the corner of Fourth street that won't touch it raw."

I saw that he wanted to talk to me, so I turned around and led the way to the temporary kitchen I had made.

"Now," he said briskly when he had closed the door. "There's something wrong here. Perhaps if you will tell me I can help. If I can't it will do you good to talk about it. My name's Holcombe, retired merchant. Apply to First National bank for references."

"I'm not sure there is anything wrong," I began. "I guess I'm only nervous and thinking little things are big ones. There's nothing to tell."

"Nonsense. I come down the street in my boat. A white faced gentleman, with a cigarette, looks out from a window when I stop at the door and ducks back when I glance up. I come in and find a pet dog, obviously overfed at ordinary times, whining with hunger on the stairs. As I prepare to feed him a pale woman comes down, trying to put a right hand glove on her left hand and with her jacket wrong side out. What am I to think?"

I started and looked at my coat. He was right. And when as I tried to take it off he helped me and even patted me on the shoulder—what with his kindness and the long morning alone, worrying, and the sleepless night, I began to cry. He had a clean handkerchief in my hand before I had time to think of one.

"That's it," he said. "It will do you good, only don't make a noise about it. If it's a husband on the annual flood spree don't worry, madam. They always come around in time to white-wash the cellars."

"It isn't a husband," I sniffed.

"Tell me about it," he said. There was something so kindly in his face and it was so long since I had had a bit of human sympathy that I almost broke down again.

CHAPTER III.

SAT there, with a crowd of children paddling on a raft outside the window, and Molly Maguire, next door, hauling the morning's milk up in a pail fastened to a rope, her doorway being too narrow to admit the milkman's boat, and I told him the whole story.

"Humph," he exclaimed, when I had finished. "It's curious, but you can't prove a murder unless you can produce a body."

"When the river goes down we'll find the body," said I, shivering. "It's in the parlor."

"Then why doesn't he try to get away?"

"He is ready to go now. He only went back when your boat came in." Mr. Holcombe ran to the door and, flinging it open, peered into the lower hall. He was too late. His boat was gone, tub of liver, pile of wooden platters and all!

We hurried to the room the Ladleys had occupied. It was empty. From the window, as we looked out, we could see the boat, almost a square away. It had stopped where, the street being higher, a doorstep rose above the flood. On the step was sitting a forlorn yellow puppy. As we stared Mr. Ladley stopped the boat, looked back at us, bent over, placed a piece of liver on a platter and reached it over to the dog. Then, rising in the boat, he bowed, with his hat over his heart, in our direction, sat down calmly and rowed around the corner out of sight.

Mr. Holcombe was in a frenzy of rage. He jumped up and down, slaking his list out of the window after the retreating boat. He ran down the staircase, only to come back and look out the window again. The police boat was not in sight, but the Maguire children had worked their raft around to the street and were under the window. He leaned out and called to them.

"A quarter each, boys," he said. "If you'll take me on that raft to the nearest pavement."

"Money first," said the oldest boy, holding his cap.

But Mr. Holcombe did not wait. He swung out over the window sill, holding by his hands, and lit fairly in the center of the raft.

"Don't touch anything in that room until I come back!" he called to me, and, jerking the pole from one of the boys, propelled the raft with amazing speed down the street.

The liver on the stove was burning. There was a smell of something through the rooms and a sort of bluish haze of smoke. I hurried back and took it off. By the time I had cleaned the pan Mr. Holcombe was back again in his own boat. He had found it at the end of the next street, where the flood ceased, but no sign of Ladley anywhere. He had not seen the police boat.

"Perhaps that is just as well," he said philosophically. "We can't go to the police with a wet slipper and a blood stained rope and accuse a man of murder. We have to have a body."

"He killed her," I said obstinately. "She told me yesterday he was a fiend. He killed her and threw the body in the water."

"Very likely. But he didn't throw it here."

But in spite of that he went over all the lower hall with his boat, feeling

"Don't touch anything in that room," every foot of the floor with an oar, and finally, at the back end, he looked up at me as I stood on the stairs.

"There's something here," he said.

I went cold all over and had to clutch the railing. But when Terry had come and the two of them brought the thing to the surface it was only the dining room rug, which I had rolled up and forgotten to carry upstairs!

At 1:30 Mr. Holcombe wrote a note and sent it off with Terry and, borrowing my boots, which had been Mr. Pitman's, investigated the dining room and kitchen from a floating plank; the doors were too narrow to admit the boat. But he found nothing more important than a rolling pin. He was not at all depressed by his failure. He came back, drenched to the skin, about 3 and asked permission to search the Ladleys' bedroom.

"I have a friend coming pretty soon. Mrs. Pitman," he said. "A young newspaper man named Howell. He's a nice boy, and if there is anything to this I'd like him to have it for his paper. He and I have been having some arguments about circumstantial evidence, too, and I know he'd like to work on this."

I gave him a pair of Mr. Pitman's socks, for his own were saturated and while he was changing them the telephone rang. It was the theater again, asking for Jennie Brice.

"You are certain she is out of the city?" some one asked, the same voice as in the morning.

"Her husband says so."

"Ask him to come to the phone."

"He is not here."

"When do you expect him back?"

"I'm not sure he is coming back."

"Look here," said the voice angrily, "can't you give me any satisfaction? Or don't you care to?"

"I've told you all I know."

"You don't know where she is?"

"No, sir."

"She didn't say she was coming back to rehearse for next week's piece?"

"Her husband said she went away for a few days' rest. He went away about noon and hasn't come back. That's all I know, except that they owe me three weeks' rent that I'd like to get hold of."

The owner of the voice hung up the receiver with a snap and left me pondering. It seemed to me that Mr. Ladley had been very reckless. Did he expect any one to believe that Jennie Brice had gone for a vacation without notifying the theater? Especially when she was to rehearse that week? I thought it curious, to say the least, I went back and told Mr. Holcombe, who put it down in his notebook, and together we went to the Ladleys' room.

The room was in better order than usual, as I have said. The bed was made—which was out of the ordinary, for Jennie Brice never made a bed—but made the way a man makes one, with the blankets wrinkled and crooked beneath and the white counterpane pulled smoothly over the top, showing every bump beneath. I showed Mr. Holcombe the splasher dotted with ink as usual.

"I'll take it off and soak it in milk," I said. "It's his fountain pen. When the ink doesn't run he shakes it, and—"

"Where's the clock?" said Mr. Holcombe, stopping in front of the mantel, with his notebook in his hand.

"The clock?"

I turned and looked. My own clock was gone from the mantel shelf.

Perhaps it seems strange, but from the moment I missed that clock my rage at Mr. Ladley increased to a fury. It was all I had left of my former gentility. When times were hard and I got behind with the rent as happened now and then, more than once I had been tempted to sell the clock or pawn it. But I had never done it. Its ticking had kept me company on many a lonely night, and its elegance had helped me to keep my pride and to retain the respect of my neighbors. For in the flood district only clocks are not plentiful. Mrs. Bryan, the school-keeper's wife, had one, and I had another, that is, I had had.

I stood staring at the mark in the dust of the mantel shelf, which Mr. Holcombe was measuring with a pocket tape measure.

"You are sure you didn't take it away yourself, Mrs. Pitman?" he asked.

"Sure? Why, I could hardly lift it!" I said.

He was looking carefully at the oblong of dust where the clock had stood. "The key is gone, too," he said, busily making entries in his notebook. "What was the maker's name?"

"Why, I don't think I ever noticed!"

He turned to me angrily. "Why didn't you notice?" he snapped. "Good God, woman, do you only use your eyes to cry with? How can you wind a clock time after time and not know the maker's name? It proves my contention—the average witness is totally unreliable."

"Not at all," I snapped. "I am ordinarily both accurate and observing."

"Indeed!" he said, putting his hands behind him. "Then perhaps you can tell me the color of the pencil I have been writing with."

"Certainly Red." Most pencils are red, and I thought this was safe.

But he held his right hand out with a flourish. "I've been writing with a fountain pen," he said in deep disgust and turned his back on me.

But the next moment he had run to the washstand and pulled it out from the wall. Behind it, where it had fallen, lay a towel covered with stains as if some one had wiped bloody hands on it. He held it up, his face working with excitement. I could only cover my eyes.

"This looks better," he said and began making a quick search of the room, running from one piece of furniture to another, pulling out bureau drawers, drawing the bed out from the wall and crawling along the baseboard with a lighted match in his hand. He gave a shout of triumph finally and reappeared from behind the bed with the broken end of my knife in his hand. "Very clumsy," he said; "very clumsy. Peter, the dog, could have done better."

I had been examining the wall paper about the washstand. Among the ink spots were one or two reddish ones that made me shiver. And seeing a scrap of note paper stuck between the base board and the wall I dug it out with a hairpin and threw it into the grate, to be burned later. It was by the merest chance there was no fire there. The next moment Mr. Holcombe was on his knees by the fireplace reaching for the scrap.

"Never do that under such circumstances," he snapped, fishing among the ashes. "You might throw away valuable—Hello, Howell!"

I turned and saw a young man in the doorway, smiling, his hat in his hand. Even at that first glance I liked Mr. Howell, and later, when every one was against him and many curious things were developing, I stood by him through everything and even helped him to the thing he wanted more than anything else in the world. But that, of course, was later.

"What's the trouble, Holcombe?" he asked. "Hitting the trail again?"

"A very curious thing that I just happened on," said Mr. Holcombe. "Mrs. Pitman, this is Mr. Howell, of whom I spoke. Sit down, Howell, and let me read you something."

With the crumpled paper still unopened in his hand, Mr. Holcombe took his notebook and read aloud what he had written. I have it before me now: "Dog meat, $2, boat hire—that's not it. Here, 'Yesterday, Sunday, March 4, Mrs. Pitman, landlady at 42 Union street, heard two of her boarders quarreling, a man and his wife. Man's name, Philip Ladley. Wife's name, Jennie Ladley, known as Jennie Brice at the Liberty Stock company, where she has been playing small parts."

Mr. Howell nodded. "I've heard of her," he said. "Not much of an actress, I believe."

"The husband was also an actor, out of work, and employing his leisure time in writing a play."

"Everybody's doing it," said Mr. Howell idly.

"The Shuberts were to star him in this," I put in. "He said that the climax at the end of the second act—"

Mr. Holcombe shut his notebook with a snap. "After we have finished gossiping," he said, "I'll go on."

"THE TREY O' HEARTS"
AT OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT"A Mind's Awakening."

Dolly arrives at the little western hotel and secures a job as waitress. The cattle buyer also comes to the hotel, awaiting the arrival of the cattlemen with whom he expects to do business. To the hotel proprietor's wife Dolly tells her story. Two years ago her father sent her east for an education. There she met and married a young New Yorker. For this her father, who had planned that she marry another, disowned her. She soon saw that her husband was tiring of her and one night she left him. Since then by degrees, she had been working her way west.

Two gamblers discover that the cattle buyer is carrying a large roll of money. They scheme to get it. That night they issue from their room and enter another, the wrong one—Dolly's. Arthur hears her screams and comes to her aid. In the fight that ensues the two card men fall through the banisters to the lobby below, where the sheriff takes them in charge. In Arthur Dolly finds her husband and soon learns that she erred in believing he was tiring of her. The belated cattlemen arrives and, overjoyed to find in Dolly, his daughter, is only too glad to offer his forgiveness and congratulations.

Shown at the New opera house this evening.

Ike, having produced the roll of money from the leg of Louise's father's trousers, rents a speedy auto mobile, and with Louise starts for the beach.
Meanwhile, father, ma and the sheriff, having extricated themselves from the roof of the hotel, start out in mad pursuit. Ike finds a notice in the paper that $100 will be given to any couple who will be married at Venice on that date. He and Louise decide that this is their chance.

The street car line running to Venice is robbed by Black Pete, a terrible bandit. The only thing of real value which the bandit procured was a silver vanity case. Leaving the scene of his crime, he runs into the road and holds up the very machine which is carrying Louise and Ike to the beach. He forces Ike to change clothes with him and attempts to get away in the machine. The nimble Ike springs on to the trunk rack at the back and the journey to the beach is continued.

Ma, pa and the sheriff, short of money, take the street car. The sheriff's hat blows out of the window and he attempts to stop the car by pulling the bell rope. He mistakes the cord and rings up several dollars on the car register. The irate conductor forcibly ejects him, also my and pa from the car.

In the loot which the bandit has thrown away is a gold-headed umbrella. The party eventually arrive at the beach and are mistaken for the robbers of the car. Ike is arrested, and put into jail with Louise. Ma is also arrested on account of having the incriminating umbrella. She sights the real bandit in Ike's clothes and denounces him to the police. Ma hikes herself to the jail and demands the release of her children. This is refused, and having knocked the guard out, she proceeds to pry the jail bars apart and rescue them.

IF KIDNEYS AND BLADDER BOTHER

Take Salts to flush Kidneys and neutralize irritating acids.

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning scalding sensation and is very pro-irritating at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse again, there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink, which quickly relieves bladder trouble.

AN ORDINANCE.

Authorizing the construction of a sanitary sewer on Hannah and Olive Streets, in the Third Ward of the Borough of Clearfield, Pennsylvania, to extend from a point near the Lawrence Township line at the Western end of Hannah Street to the main sewer on Turnpike Avenue, and providing that the cost thereof be assessed back to the owners of the properties abutting on said streets.

Be it ordained by the Town Council of the Borough of Clearfield in Council regularly assembled, and it is hereby ordained and enacted by authority of the same:

Section 1. That a public sanitary sewer be laid out, constructed and built on Hannah and Olive Streets in the Third Ward of the Borough of Clearfield, Pennsylvania, to extend from a point near the Lawrence Township line at the Western end of Hannah Street East along said street to Olive Street, thence along Olive Street, North to Hannah Street and thence along Hannah Street to the main sewer on Turnpike Avenue; said sewer to be constructed of terra cotta pipe and to be not less than eight inches in diameter; and when completed the cost thereof shall be assessed back to the owners of the real estate abutting on said streets, which assessment if not promptly paid shall be collected from said abutting property owners as provided by law.

Section 2. The Utilities Committee of the Town Council is hereby authorized to lay out, build and construct said sewer under the direction and supervision of the Borough Engineer, and when said sewer is constructed it shall become one of the public sewers of said borough, and shall be subject to all the rules and regulations for the control of the sewerage system of the Borough of Clearfield.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PARADEAT OSCEOLA CONVENTION

In connection with the Clearfield County Sunday School convention at Osceola Mills, Aug. 25-26, we will hold our annual Street Demonstration Tuesday evening, Aug. 25. All men, "teen" age pupils, boy scouts, and the band or drum corps in Clearfield county, Philipsburg and vicinity, are cordially invited to be present, and take part in the parade.

We are aiming to have a band at the head of each division and to have each class carry a banner. Will you and your entire Sunday school cooperate in making this the largest and best parade we have ever held?

Trusting that we may safely depend on you to do your part, and with kind regard in plenty, I am, Faithfully yours,

Rev. O. B. Poulson,
Co. Supt. O. A. B. C.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The public schools of Clearfield will open for the school year 1914-1915 Tuesday, September 1st.

All pupils entering the Clearfield schools for the first time must present a certificate of successful vaccination.

There will be an examination in the High school building, Friday, Aug. 28th, for those who wish to get credit for advance standing and for those who have conditions.

GEO. E. ZERFOSS,
Superintendent.

To be Continued next Wednesday.

NOTE—This excellent story of mystery has been reproduced in moving picture form and will be shown at the New opera house every Wednesday evening, and commences at that place tonight. Two installments of the story will be run in the PROGRESS each week—on Monday and Wednesday.

POPE DIES AFTER SHORT ILLNESS

mediately thereafter there was put in motion those ceremonies which only mark the passing of the august head of the church. Messages went forth to all the cardinals of the crisis, to the Catholic capitals of Europe and to America.

Body Removed to Chapel.

The pope's body was removed from the death chamber to the Sistine chapel, this morning, and solemn and impressive ceremonies were conducted. Huge congregations of mourners turning out.

The steps are being taken by the warring nations to assure the safe conduct of the electors to Rome to choose a successor to the dead pope.

Father Francis X. Wernz, head of the Jesuits, known as "Black Pope," died shortly after Pius X. expired.

Sketch of Pope's Life.

"It is very strange," remarked Pius X. one day to a close friend in Rome, "how my life is divided into periods of nine years." He went to school at 9 years of age from the Venetian fields that were the heritage of people as "common" as himself. Nine years afterward he entered college. He was village priest for nine years and bishop of Mantua the same period. Then for another nine years he was cardinal and patriarch of Venice, at the end of that time, in 1903 being elevated to the papacy. He passed the ninth anniversary of his election only last August. His life indeed went by nines.

Was Born a Peasant.

Pope Pius X, born Joseph Sarto, came of the peasantry, seeing the light of day at Reese, in the north of Italy, June 2, 1835. His family, like all the rest of the people of the village, were poor, and it was only by the closest calculations that they were able to make both ends meet. His father, a postman, made but forty cents a day, and his mother helped out this pitifully meager wage by making dresses for her peasant acquaintances. The young Sarto suffered all the hardships of the place and time, yet rose above them all, early showing the sweetness of his nature, coupled with strength of will that gave him place in the world.

His Rise Was Steady.

His rise, despite the obstacles which confronted him at almost every step, was rapid. Early in life, the future pope attracted attention of the village priest, who saw in him more than ordinary ability. Joseph went barefooted to school to save his shoes and after four years at a seminary was sent to a higher school. His oration as a priest came at the age of 25, and he had several charges, growing in influence and importance until he was rector of the seminary, then bishop of Mantua.

A Simple Mannered Man.

In 1893 Father Sarto was made cardinal by Leo XIII, receiving San Bernardo in Rome as his titular church. When he became cardinal, he also became patriarch of Venice, an office he was filling when in 1903 he was chosen as the head of the Roman Catholic church by the sacred college.

During all these years, he was noted for his simple manner of living and his charities. The papacy was a great burden to him and he received it as a cross.

SEVERE ELECTRIC STORM VISITS TOWN AT NOONHOUR

A severe but brief electric storm visited this town at 12:30 today. A number of telephone poles were struck putting out of service electric power wires. Incidentally the mechanical department of the Clearfield Progress office was unable to resume business until nearly 3 o'clock this afternoon.

One of the employees of the electric light company was knocked down by a shock while he was in the Penn Public Service office.

Hail as large as hazelnuts fell in some parts of town during the storm.

POPE PIUS X DIES AFTER ILLNESS OF FOUR DAYS

Pontiff's Demise Hastened by Grief Over the War Between European Nations

CARDINALS CALLED TO ELECT SUCCESSOR

The Dead Pope Was a Simple Mannered Man, Who Regarded His Elevation to the Papacy as a Burden—Was Born a Peasant and Received His Education Under Great Difficulties and Hardships—End Follows a Relapse.

(By International News Service)
Rome, Aug. 20.—Pope Pius X died at 1.20 o'clock this morning. The passing of the supreme pontiff of the Roman Catholic church was not unexpected. From about noon yesterday he had been unconscious and steadily growing weaker, and official bulletins had prepared the church for the worst.

He had realized his condition in the early morning yesterday, when he said farewell to his sisters and his brother and laid his last injunction upon Cardinal Merry del Val, the papal secretary of state.

Cause of His Death.
Death was due to his ancient enemy bronchial catarrh, which became acute on Sunday. The attacks which he fought off a year ago returned to find him overwrought with grief inspired by the great European war.

The vitality with which he fought former attacks had been absorbed in his prayers and meditations for peace. The assistance he once rendered his physicians was lacking, as he forgot himself, and thought only of the catastrophe which the world is facing.

Was Taken Ill Sunday.
Renewed manifestations of his ancient illness, bronchial catarrh and gout, confined him to his bed Sunday morning. It was thought then the attack would respond to treatment as before, but when it did not Doctor Marchisava summoned specialists to a consultation. The ancient hopeful spirit of the patient was missing this time.

The European war weighed heavily on his mind and heart, and he could do nothing. The fever increased during Tuesday and later he could not retain nourishment. Liquids were administered during the afternoon of Tuesday, but he would only shake his head. It was not thought he suffered any pain, but that he was extremely weak he himself testified.

Personal Family Summoned.
With yesterday, after a ceaseless all-night vigil of physicians it was admitted that the condition of the pope was critical. It was thought best to summon his personal family, his two sisters in a nearby convent and his brother, Joseph Sarto, to his bedside. At the same time word was sent out to all cardinals who had left Rome that the supreme pontiff was gravely ill.

Joseph Sarto, the brother, was admitted to the bedside before 8 o'clock yesterday morning, and a little later the sisters arrived, all to depart weeping. Then came Cardinal Merry del Val, papal secretary of state. Even the physicians and the nurses withdrew at this conference, which was in absolute secret.

It is believed then that the pope told Cardinal Del Val that he was about to die, for the visitor emerged from the sick room weeping and im-

POPE PIUS X DIES AFTER A BRIEF ILLNESS

Work on Improvements Progressing Favorably—Contractor Began Laying Brick on South Second Street Yesterday—Curbing Being Constructed on North Second Street.

Borough council met in regular session last evening. In the absence of President Kerr, Mr. Beahan was chosen to preside, while Mr. Fletcher acted as secretary.

The committee reported favorably the proposition to pave the alley between Pine and Locust streets, between Second and Front streets, but council decided that it could not act in the matter until the abutting property owners have entered into an agreement to pay their share of the cost of the work.

An ordinance providing for the construction of a sewer in Pine street, from that street's intersection at Fourth street, to Cemetery road, was passed.

The bond given by Amos Hess, indemnifying the borough against possible damage through the abandonment of the work, was accepted.

THE A. O. H. ADJOURNS ON DEATH OF POPE

The state convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and Ladies auxiliary, being held at DuBois, adjourned yesterday afternoon immediately on receiving a report of the death of Pope Pius X. Resolutions of condolence were passed and a cablegram was sent to Cardinal Merry Del Val.

At the morning session yesterday the nomination of officers took place. There are no contests, excepting for state president, P. A. Kilgallen, of Allegheny county, and Dr. John A. Farrell, of Chester county, having received the nominations. The remainder of the ticket is as follows:

Vice president, John Campion, of Schuylkill county; secretary, John O'Dea, of Philadelphia; treasurer, John B. Boyle, of Luzerne.

The secretary's report shows there are 451 divisions in Pennsylvania, leading all the states, with a membership of 37,088, an increase of more than 5000 under the present administration.

LAJOIE BEING KNOCKED BY MANAGER OF NAPS

BY FRANK G. MENKE.
(SPECIAL TO THE PROGRESS)

New York, Aug. 20.—There are few fans in the country today who can believe the charges brought by Manager Joe Birmingham of the Naps that Larry Lajoie has laid down on him—that the great Frenchman has not given the club the best that was in him.

Those who know Lajoie personally and those who know him only through his record as a ball player cannot believe that Birmingham's charges are founded on fact. For eighteen years Lajoie has been in big league baseball and during all those years he has been a credit and an honor to the game. For eighteen years not a breath of scandal has fluttered about his name.

And now comes Birmingham, disfranchised and angered because he is the leader of a tail end team and attempts to blacken the name of a man who has done a hundred times more baseball than he ever has done or ever will do, and whose memory will live and be cherished for decades after Birmingham's has been forgotten.

Does Birmingham wish to get rid of Lajoie because he fears that the veteran second baseman may supplant him as manager? There are some who feel that this might be the underlying cause for Birmingham's charges against the veteran. Several months ago a report was current that such a change would take place. Birmingham is said to have a contract that still has two years to run, but managers are not always retained for the full length of their contract.

None of those who know the great Frenchman intimately can believe for one moment that he would deliberately plot against and man Lajoie stacks up as a man, clean and straight, and one who had given the best that is in him to his superiors for 18 years. Certain it seems that now, in the twilight of his wonderful career, he could not change his nature; and he would not sully his name by any quitting tactics.

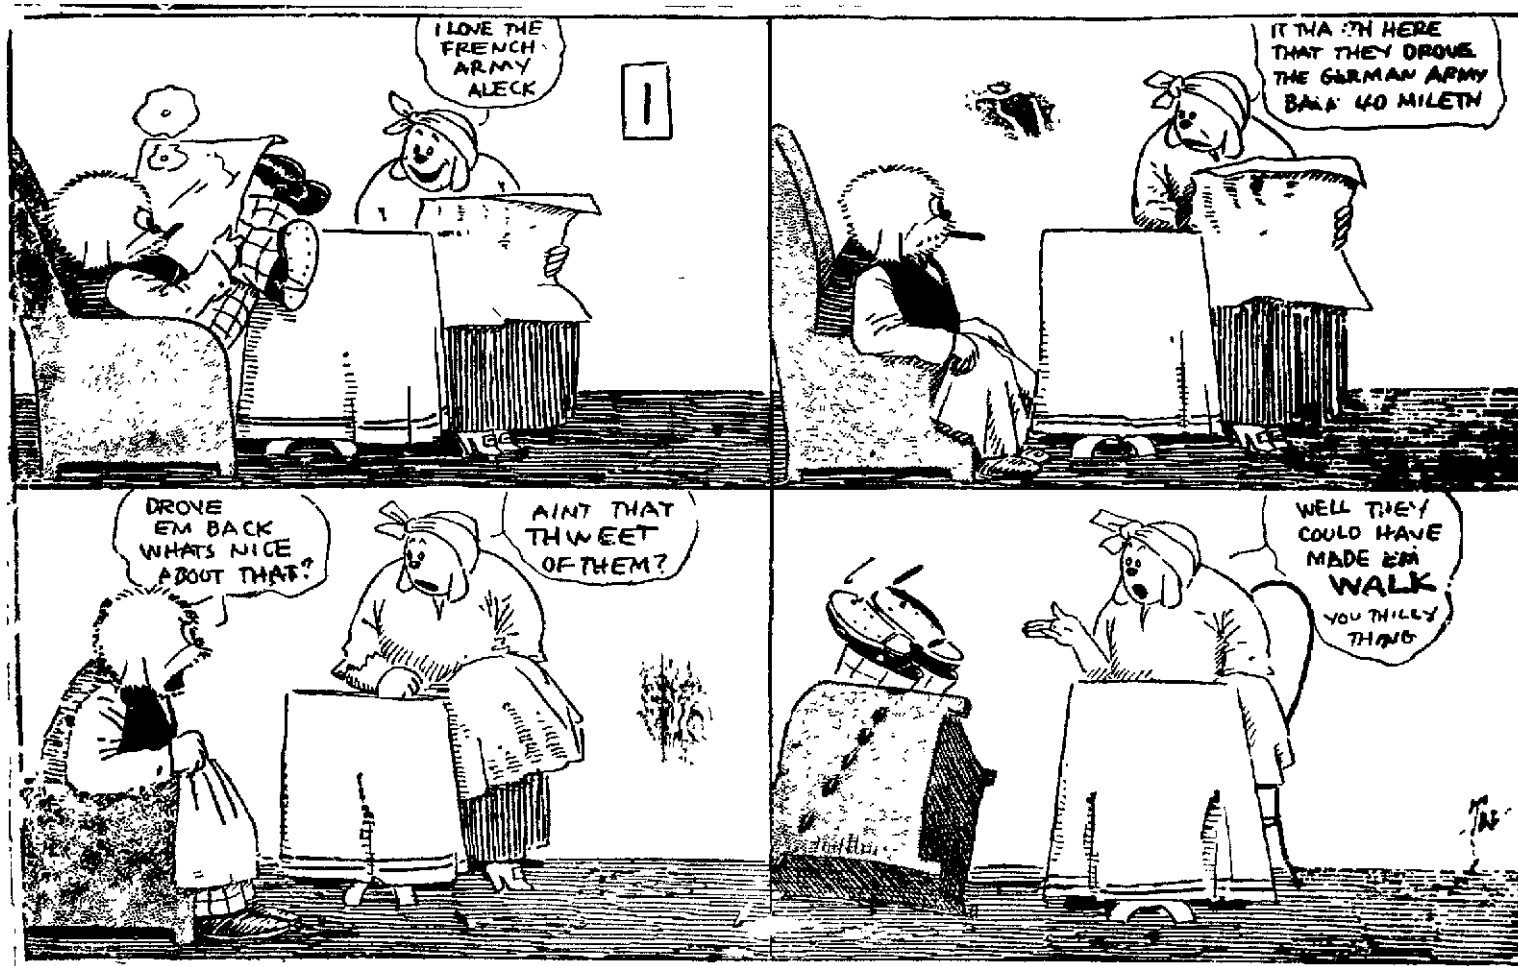

Lajoie has not been hitting them out this year. His batting has been woefully weak. But there has been nothing wrong with his fielding, nothing wrong with his throwing. He still is, despite his 39 years, the most graceful fielder in the game, and he still ranks as one of the greatest defensive players in the big leagues.

If Birmingham bases his charges against Lajoie on the fact that he isn't hitting, it would seem that Lajoie is being treated unjustly. Lajoie has been in a slump and batting slumps come frequently in the careers of even the most wonderful and most consistent sluggers. This isn't the first batting slump that Lajoie has encountered. Back in 1907 and 1908 the best he could do was .299 and .289. The general verdict then was—"He's through." Lajoie upset the dope by coming back in 1909 with .324, in 1910 with .384, 365 in 1911, 368 in 1912 and .335 in 1913.

This year Lajoie hasn't been able to hit them for better than about .223. His grand average covering all the other years of his careers is .351—the best average ever compiled by anyone over such a lengthy stretch. It's a wonderful record and one no doubt that brought to Lajoie a feeling of pride.

An average of .223 for this season will tear Lajoie's general average down something like 8 or 9 points. Bringing him down to around .342 it still remains a wonderful record but not such a seemingly unbeatable one as .351. Does anyone think that Lajoie deliberately would lay down in his hitting, knowing full well that such an act would rob him in the final years of his baseball career of the honor of retiring with a grand average better than any batsman ever made before?

Lajoie, during the ten years or so of his connection with the Cleveland club has made thousands of intimate friends there. He has made thousands of intimate friends along the circuit. And he has millions of admirers. Does anyone think that Lajoie would do anything that would cause him the loss of those friendships, lose for him the admiration that millions have?

On the face of things it looks as if Birmingham's charges, if correctly quoted, are without foundation.

THE CASE OF JENNIE BRICE

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Was Jennie Brice murdered? If so, who killed her?
What did "Horn" mean? Also, strange mark on the body?

Read our new serial and solve these mysteries

The Trey O' Hearts

If you've got a drop of red blood in your veins—if your heart beats one bit faster to the tune of romance—adventure—love and mystery—then you've something in store so far ahead of anything you've ever seen that you will never forget.

The Pictures The Universal Film Manufacturing Co., pronounced THE TREY O' HEARTS the best action story for film purposes they had seen in three years. They backed up their judgment by putting the punch and $200,000 cash into a set of pictures that are more than remarkable—they're simply extraordinary.

Won't Cost You One Red Penny You attend the movies—regularly. Instead of an ordinary film, you'll see graphically pictured by the best emotional actors and actresses in America—THE TREY O' HEARTS—a pace maker in pictures. So it won't cost you a nickel more to see it.

Mental Back Somersaults No matter how clever, you can't fathom the plot of THE TREY O' HEARTS one inch ahead of the scene you're viewing. It keeps you turning mental back somersaults all the way.

Full Reel Action in Every Foot The Universal Film Manufacturing Co., who are producing these films tell us that there is more action in every foot of THE TREY O' HEARTS than in a full reel of the ordinary scenario. And they should know. Thousands of scenarios go through their hands every year and they're investing $200,000 in putting THE TREY O' HEARTS on the screen. That's backing judgment. And their success in the moving picture business tells whether or not they know a good thing when they see it.

¶ "THE CASE OF JENNIE BRICE" will be run in a liberal installment each day, and "THE TREY O' HEARTS" will appear on every Monday and Wednesday—Three full columns on each of these two days, and will also be run in pictures at the NEW OPERA HOUSE Wednesday Evening's.

READ THE STORY!

SEE THE PICTURES!

¶ Be sure to get the first installments of these two Blue Ribbon Stories in Wednesday Evening's issue, and then don't miss a chapter after that, for they're both positively the biggest hits in the serial story line.

Good evening! Remember, man loves darkness because his deeds are evil; therefore go to bed early lest you too be suspected.

And, then, the news from Berlin may not be just what the allies might wish to read.

Some youths of tender years are being sold or given whiskey. Who is violating the law?

Some of those European war stories read as if ex-President Huerta had turned war correspondent.

It would be a good idea to put the price boosters in jail while the investigation of the food trust is on.

To increase the price of sugar just in the canning season is enough to cause a rebellion among housewives.

Can the Clearfield taxpayers raise that little sum of nearly four hundred and fifty thousand dollars with which to buy the water works?

Would like to advise the boys and girls of Clearfield to learn to swim. It is a good idea to ask them to go down miles to find water clean enough to bathe in.

ROOSEVELT TO FARMERS.

What Colonel Roosevelt told the farmers of Maine is equally applicable to the farmers of other states. So far as the farmer is concerned, he does not make unreasonable demands upon state or national governments. He wants a chance to market his crops at the least expense to himself. He wants the tariff so regulated that his products will not be driven from the market by the products of foreign farms. He wants honest government so that the taxes he pays may not be wasted. He wants his children to be able to live under a government which will assure to them opportunities for advancement equal to those afforded the children of other people.

Colonel Roosevelt pointed out to the farmers of the Pine Tree state the fact that the tillers of the soil, the laborer and the business man cannot hope to receive consideration at the hands of the two old political parties. Both of the old parties are controlled by special privilege, and special privilege is the enemy of the plain people. The pledges and promises made by the old parties in their platforms are made to deceive and with no purpose on the part of the old parties to make good these pledges and promises. The farmers of Maine were told that their only chance of gaining what they desire is through the Progressive party. This is such a self-evident fact that it is being imbibed by more voters year by year. The Progressive party stands for the things which are beneficial to the people; the Republican and Democratic parties stand for special privilege, for the class of citizens who have selfishly and arrogantly usurped the rights of the people through such agents as Penrose, Barnes, Smoot and the like, against the best interests of people as a whole, and for the aggrandizement of the few.

A DIRTLESS CITY.

One city in the United States advertises itself as a dustless city; another as a dogless city; another as a smokeless city and another as a noiseless city. In these days of civic clubs, women's clubs and the like American cities are becoming ashamed of conditions which were tolerated a decade ago. Pride in the town they live in is a mark of the intelligent, patriotic citizen, and if the example of some of the larger towns is followed the time will come when all municipalities may boast of being ideal places in which to live.

There may be some excuse for noise in a big city. It is also difficult for manufacturers to get along without filling the air with smoke. There is no reason, however, why any town should be a dirty town. Dirt is not essential to the business or individual activities of a town. Dirt, in fact, is detrimental to health as well as a disfigurement of the town's beauty. Dirt is readily removable and no municipality can offer a reasonable excuse for maintaining dirty streets and no citizen should be allowed to maintain dirty rear yards.

CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY WHILE EUROPE WARS.

Vienna, Aug. 20.—Francis Joseph, emperor of Austria, celebrated his 84th birthday here Tuesday. The celebration was not a merry one. The great war his ultimatum to Serbia has caused, has plunged the emperor in grief. The life of the aged ruler had been marked by many tragedies.

FREE BAND CONCERT WAS ENJOYED BY THE CITIZENS

Court House square was packed with citizens last evening, gathered there to listen to the concert given by the Fifth Regiment band. Every available piece of ground in the square was occupied by a music lover, everybody anticipating a treat. The crowd was not disappointed, for the band rendered a program of popular airs such as has seldom been heard in this community.

The band played in excellent style, each piece being heartily applauded by the citizens. There was close attention paid to the musical numbers by the crowd, only a few motorists marring the event by their noise.

BRUSSELS SOON TO FALL BEFORE GERMAN FORCES.

The palace of King Albert in Brussels (above) and a troop of German uhlans, the bravest fighting men of the kaiser's army, who are fast closing in about the capital of Belgium. After having taken Brussels the Germans will push on to Antwerp, and will then turn back to their march against Paris once more. The fall of Brussels and Antwerp will mark the defeat of the first of the kaiser's enemies.

EXPERT'S REPORT UNSATISFACTORY

in the dark as to the actual cost of construction and maintenance, fact which the borough is extremely anxious to have made known.

Wants the Actual Figures.
 Borough Solicitor Urey read a letter which he had composed, in the name of the committee, which will be transmitted to the water company. In this letter the committee says:

The part of the act of 1871 which applies to this matter fixes the price to be paid by the borough for your plant at "the net cost of construction and maintaining the same, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per centum per annum, deducting from said interest all dividends theretofore declared."

The schedule you have furnished gives nine columns, not one of which purports to be the "net cost of erecting." The act of assembly says nothing about "plant inventory" or "physical value," and we are not concerned with those items just at present. We do ask, however, that you furnish us a statement which will comply with the act of assembly, and we decide that statement to contain the following information.

What Committee Wants.

1. The net cost of erecting, showing the net expenditure each year from the following funds:
 - a. From earnings of the company.
 - b. From subscriptions to stock, assessments, sale of bonds, etc.
2. The net cost of maintenance, showing the net expenditure each year from the following funds:
 - a. From earnings of the company.
 - b. From subscriptions to stock, assessments, sale of bonds, etc.

You have furnished a list of dividends paid and if you will give us the information called for in this letter we can make up the interest calculation and complete statement in compliance with the terms of the act of assembly.

Ask Early Reply.

We may desire some further information later, but we hope your reply to this letter will be sufficient for the present.

It is not the purpose of our committee to put you to unnecessary trouble, but as your books have been gone over by an expert recently, and you no doubt have this information at hand, we hope that you will be able to give us a reply to this letter within the next ten days.

The expert's report shows that since the organization of the Clearfield Water company in 1882 dividends to the amount of $283,815 have been paid on the earnings of the company.

With the closing of the program, after the "Star Spangled Banner" had been given, the crowd dispersed, voting the band the thanks of the citizens for its generosity.

NO CONTRACT LET FOR HOSE HOUSE

ment of the strip of land in front of Mr. Hess' property on Latimer street, was received.

The proposition to stop work on the Spruce street sewer at the corner of the property of David Ardary was held over for the present.

The ancient discussion over the condition of the culvert on Nichols street in which the B. & P. railroad is concerned with the borough, was resumed, and council directed the borough engineer and the utilities committee to consult with railroad company and see if the muddle cannot be straightened out.

When the bids for the construction of the fire company houses in the Second and Fourth wards were called for it was found that only one firm had presented bids. Anderson & Beemer's bid for the Fourth ward house was $3400, and for the Second ward house, $3500. As only $2500 had been appropriated for erection of each of these houses, council rejected the bids.

It was stated that some of the contractors refrained from bidding on these contracts because they believed they could not build the houses for the amount appropriated to that purpose by the council. The matter will be threshed over at a subsequent meeting of council.

In his report Engineer Hess stated that a good deal of work had been done on the improvements items. Contractor Ferguson on Tuesday began the setting of the curb and gutter on North Second street. On South Second street the work of constructing the state highway is progressing satisfactorily. The curb and gutter are finished and the concrete base for the paving laid. The laying of the brick was begun at the Spruce street end yesterday, about 300 feet being completed up to last night.

In the matter of material for the repairing of South Second street, from Walnut street to Ogden avenue, the engineer states that trap rock of the very best quality has been secured from the Birdshorn company, 300 tons being required. Repairing curb and paving on Daisy street is in progress.

Council directed that an order for $1614.44 be drawn in favor of George I. Thompson, due on work done on South Second street.

WOMEN ON THE FIELD OF BATTLE

Hungarian Females Follow the Men to Armed Camps

ARE BRAVE AND FEARLESS

Story of How the Wife of a Hungarian Chief Repelled an Attack on Fort Egri by a Band of Turks—Ideal Equality of Sexes in That Country.

(By International News Service)

Budapest, Hungary, Aug. 20. Women will be seen on the battlefields of Europe, if the fighting between Austria-Hungary and Serbia and Russia becomes general. Since the men of Hungary have been called to the war the women of that kingdom not only are protecting the homes, but many of them have followed the men to the armed camps.

The women of Hungary are brave and fearless. They say that if necessary they will fight again, just as they did in the revolution of 1848, when they went to the front as officers and soldiers, and stood shoulder to shoulder with their husbands, fathers and brothers.

One of the favorite stories which Hungarian women tell again and again to their children, is that of the capture of Fort Egri and how Dobo Katka, the wife of the chief whose territory was being besieged by the Turks, led the women against the invaders.

She rode out into the center of the town, and called the women together, asking them in the name of their country to arm themselves and follow her. They all disappeared on the instant, and Dobo Katka was afraid for a while they were not brave or patriotic enough to fight. But soon they returned, armed with pitchforks, clubs and stones, and followed her to where the Turks were climbing up a rope ladder to the fort, which stood on a cliff.

The women heated tar in pitchers and poured the boiling stuff down on the Turks, also pelting them with the stones and jabbing them with the pitchforks. Dobo Katka climbed halfway down the ladder, and took the red flag from the hands of the Turks.

In every war in which Hungary has been engaged, the women of every class, high and low, rich and poor, are treated with respect and equality. Men consult their wives on business deals. Husband and wife are equal partners in their possessions.

Because of this practice, the women feel as much patriotism as the men. The Hungarian women perhaps are more loyal to their country, than the women of any other nation, because they feel an equality with the men. That is why they fight.

It is not only possible, but highly probable, that if the Hungarian soldiers are drawn into the present war have had no time to want the ballot, to fight for Austria, their women will be found on the battlefield, fighting with their husbands and brothers.

Hungary is one of the nations of Europe where there is no movement for equal suffrage. The women have long been used to absolute equality in the home, in business and in industrial affairs, that apparently they had no time to want the ballot.

WOODLAND YOUNG MAN SURE HE SAW ROBBERS.

Preston Parks, returning to his home in Woodland at an early hour Sunday morning, after spending a pleasant evening at a citizen's home in that place, discovered what he supposed to be a robber at Mr. Pickles' grocery store, in Lower Woodland. Preston aroused a few neighbors and they investigated and found an automobile with lights all out except one, which was burning very low and would flash about every second out into the road. It sure resembled a burglar's flashlight, but it wasn't. When a young man is calling on his best girl with his auto he should be sure to turn out all the lights and avoid arousing the neighborhood at an early hour in the morning.

CLEARFIELD FIREMEN GO TO PATTON CONVENTION.

The members of the Clearfield fire department and a number of citizens left on the morning train over the New York Central for Patton, where the three-day convention began this morning. The fire ladders of the town were headed by the Fifth Regiment band.

The sessions of the convention are expected to be very interesting, and the fire fighters anticipate a delightful time in Patton, whose citizens made every preparation for their reception and entertainment.

Clearfield was a candidate for the convention next year, but it now looks as if the firemen of the district will vote in favor of going to Philipsburg in 1915.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's old Favorite Remedy of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everybody knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

THE CASE OF JENNIE BRICE

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

I reached over to lift him a clout on the head, but I did not. The sunlight was coming in through the window at the top of the stairs, and shining on the rope that was tied to the banister. The end of the rope was covered with stains, bright with a glint of red in them.

I got up shivering. "You can get the meat at the butcher's, Terry," I said, "and come back for me in half an hour." Then I turned and went upstairs, weak in the knees, to put on my hat and coat. I had made up my mind that there had been murder done.

I looked at my clock as I went downstairs. It was just 12:30. I thought of telephoning for Mr. Reynolds to meet me, but it was his lunch hour, and besides, I was afraid to telephone from the house while Mr. Ladley was in it.

Peter had been whining again. When I came down the stairs he had stopped whimpering and was wagging his tail. A strange boat had put into the wharf and was coming back.

"Now, old boy!" somebody was saying from the boat. "Steady, old chap! I've got something for you!"

A little man, elderly and alert, was standing up in the boat, poling it along with an oar. Peter gave vent to joyful yelps. The elderly gentleman brought his boat to a stop at the foot of the stairs and, reaching down into a tub at his feet, held up a large piece of raw liver. Peter almost went crazy, and I remember suddenly that I had forgotten to feed the poor beast for more than a day.

"Would you like it?" asked the gentleman. Peter sat up, as he had been taught to do, and barked. The gentleman reached down again, got a wooden platter from a stack of them at his feet and, placing the liver on it, put it on the step. The whole thing was so neat and businesslike that I could only gaze.

"That's a well trained dog, madam," said the elderly gentleman, beaming at Peter over his glasses. "You should not have neglected him."

"The food put him out of my mind," I explained, humbly enough, for I was ashamed.

"Exactly. Do you know how many starving dogs and cats I have found this morning?" He took a notebook out of his pocket and glanced at it. "Forty-eight! Forty-eight, madam! And ninety-three cats! I have found them marooned in trees, clinging to fences, floating on barrels, and I have found them in comfortable houses where there was no excuse for their neglect. Well, I must be moving on. I have the report of a cat with a new litter in the loft of a stable near here."

He wiped his hands carefully on a fresh paper napkin, of which also a heap rested on one of the seats of the boat, and picked up an oar, smiling benevolently at Peter. "Then suddenly he bent over and looked at the stained rope and tied to the stair rail.

"What's that?" he said.

"That's what I'm going to find out," I replied. I glanced up at the Ladleys' door, but it was closed.

The little man dropped his oar and, fumbling in his pockets, pulled out a small magnifying glass. He bent over, holding to the rail, and inspected the stains with the glass. I had taken a fancy to him at once, and in spite of my excitement I had to smile a little.

"Humph," he said and looked up at me; "that's blood! Why did you cut the boat loose?"

"I didn't," I said. "If that is blood I want to know how it got there. That was a new rope last night!" I glanced at the Ladleys' door again, and he followed my eyes.

"I wonder," he said, raising his voice a little. "If I come into your kitchen if you will allow me to fry a little of that liver. There's a wretched Maltese in a tree at the corner of Fourth street that won't touch it raw."

I saw that he wanted to talk to me, so I turned around and led the way to the temporary kitchen I had made.

"Now," he said briskly when he had closed the door. "There's something wrong here. Perhaps if you will tell me I can help. If I can't it will do you good to talk about it. My name's Holcombe, retired merchant. Apply to First National bank for references."

"I'm not sure there is anything wrong," I began. "I guess I'm only nervous and thinking little things are big ones. There's nothing to tell."

"Nonsense. I come down the street in my boat. A white faced gentleman, with a cigarette, looks out from a window when I stop at the door and ducks back when I glance up. I come in and find a pet dog, obviously overfed at ordinary times, whining with hunger on the stairs. As I prepare to feed him a pale woman comes down, trying to put a right hand glove on her left hand and with her jacket wrong side out. What am I to think?"

I started and looked at my coat. He was right. And when as I tried to take it off he helped me and even patted me on the shoulder—what with his kindness and the long morning alone, worrying, and the sleepless night, I began to cry. He had a clean handkerchief in my hand before I had time to think of one.

"That's it," he said. "It will do you good, only don't make a noise about it. If it's a husband on the annual flood spree don't worry, madam. They always come around in time to white-wash the cellars."

"It isn't a husband," I sniffed.

"Tell me about it," he said. There was something so kindly in his face and it was so long since I had had a bit of human sympathy that I almost broke down again.

CHAPTER III.

SAT there, with a crowd of children paddling on a raft outside the window, and Molly Maguire, next door, hauling the morning's milk up in a pail fastened to a rope, her doorway being too narrow to admit the milkman's boat, and I told him the whole story.

"Humph," he exclaimed, when I had finished. "It's curious, but you can't prove a murder unless you can produce a body."

"When the river goes down we'll find the body," said I, shivering. "It's in the parlor."

"Then why doesn't he try to get away?"

"He is ready to go now. He only went back when your boat came in." Mr. Holcombe ran to the door and, flinging it open, peered into the lower hall. He was too late. His boat was gone, tub of liver, pile of wooden platters and all!

We hurried to the room the Ladleys had occupied. It was empty. From the window, as we looked out, we could see the boat, almost a square away. It had stopped where, the street being higher, a doorstep rose above the flood. On the step was sitting a forlorn yellow puppy. As we stared Mr. Ladley stopped the boat, looked back at us, bent over, placed a piece of liver on a platter and reached it over to the dog. Then, rising in the boat, he bowed, with his hat over his heart, in our direction, sat down calmly and rowed around the corner out of sight.

Mr. Holcombe was in a frenzy of rage. He jumped up and down, slaking his fist out of the window after the retreating boat. He ran down the staircase, only to come back and look out the window again. The police boat was not in sight, but the Maguire children had worked their raft around to the street and were under the window. He leaned out and called to them.

"A quarter each, boys," he said. "If you'll take me on that raft to the nearest pavement."

"Money first," said the oldest boy, holding his cap.

But Mr. Holcombe did not wait. He swung out over the window sill, holding by his hands, and lit fairly in the center of the raft.

"Don't touch anything in that room until I come back!" he called to me, and, jerking the pole from one of the boys, propelled the raft with amazing speed down the street.

The liver on the stove was burning. There was a smell of something through the rooms and a sort of bluish haze of smoke. I hurried back and took it off. By the time I had cleaned the pan Mr. Holcombe was back again in his own boat. He had found it at the end of the next street, where the flood ceased, but no sign of Ladley anywhere. He had not seen the police boat.

"Perhaps that is just as well," he said philosophically. "We can't go to the police with a wet slipper and a blood stained rope and accuse a man of murder. We have to have a body."

"He killed her," I said obstinately. "She told me yesterday he was a fiend. He killed her and threw the body in the water."

"Very likely. But he didn't throw it here."

But in spite of that he went over all the lower hall with his boat, feeling

"Don't touch anything in that room," every foot of the door with an oar, and finally, at the back end, he looked up at me as I stood on the stairs.

"There's something here," he said.

I went cold all over and had to clutch the railing. But when Terry had come and the two of them brought the thing to the surface it was only the dining room rug, which I had rolled up and forgotten to carry upstairs!

At 1:30 Mr. Holcombe wrote a note and sent it off with Terry and, borrowing my boots, which had been Mr. Pitman's, investigated the dining room and kitchen from a floating plank; the doors were too narrow to admit the boat. But he found nothing more important than a rolling pin. He was not at all depressed by his failure. He came back, drenched to the skin, about 3 and asked permission to search the Ladleys' bedroom.

"I have a friend coming pretty soon. Mrs. Pitman," he said. "A young newspaper man named Howell. He's a nice boy, and if there is anything to this I'd like him to have it for his paper. He and I have been having some arguments about circumstantial evidence, too, and I know he'd like to work on this."

I gave him a pair of Mr. Pitman's socks, for his own were saturated and while he was changing them the telephone rang. It was the theater again, asking for Jennie Brice.

"You are certain she is out of the city?" some one asked, the same voice as in the morning.

"Her husband says so."

"Ask him to come to the phone."

"He is not here."

"When do you expect him back?"

"I'm not sure he is coming back."

"Look here," said the voice angrily, "can't you give me any satisfaction? Or don't you care to?"

"I've told you all I know."

"You don't know where she is?"

"No, sir."

"She didn't say she was coming back to rehearse for next week's piece?"

"Her husband said she went away for a few days' rest. He went away about noon and hasn't come back. That's all I know, except that they owe me three weeks' rent that I'd like to get hold of."

The owner of the voice hung up the receiver with a snap and left me pondering. It seemed to me that Mr. Ladley had been very reckless. Did he expect any one to believe that Jennie Brice had gone for a vacation without notifying the theater? Especially when she was to rehearse that week? I thought it curious, to say the least, I went back and told Mr. Holcombe, who put it down in his notebook, and together we went to the Ladleys' room.

The room was in better order than usual, as I have said. The bed was made—which was out of the ordinary, for Jennie Brice never made a bed—but made the way a man makes one, with the blankets wrinkled and crooked beneath and the white counterpane pulled smoothly over the top, showing every bump beneath. I showed Mr. Holcombe the splasher dotted with ink as usual.

"I'll take it off and soak it in milk," I said. "It's his fountain pen. When the ink doesn't run he shakes it, and—"

"Where's the clock?" said Mr. Holcombe, stopping in front of the mantel, with his notebook in his hand.

"The clock?"

I turned and looked. My own clock was gone from the mantel shelf.

Perhaps it seems strange, but from the moment I missed that clock my rage at Mr. Ladley increased to a fury. It was all I had left of my former gentility. When times were hard and I got behind with the rent, as happened now and then, more than once I had been tempted to sell the clock or pawn it. But I had never done it. Its ticking had kept me company on many a lonely night, and its elegance had helped me to keep my pride and to retain the respect of my neighbors. For in the flood district only clocks are not plentiful. Mrs. Bryan, the school-keeper's wife, had one, and I had another, that is, I had had.

I stood staring at the mark in the dust of the mantel shelf, which Mr. Holcombe was measuring with a pocket tape measure.

"You are sure you didn't take it away yourself, Mrs. Pitman?" he asked.

"Sure? Why, I could hardly lift it," I said.

He was looking carefully at the oblong of dust where the clock had stood. "The key is gone, too," he said, busily making entries in his notebook.

"What was the maker's name?"

"Why, I don't think I ever noticed!"

He turned to me angrily. "Why didn't you notice?" he snapped. "Good God, woman, do you only use your eyes to cry with? How can you wind a clock time after time and not know the maker's name? It proves my contention—the average witness is totally unreliable."

"Not at all," I snapped. "I am ordinarily both accurate and observing."

"Indeed!" he said, putting his hands behind him. "Then perhaps you can tell me the color of the pencil I have been writing with."

"Certainly Red." Most pencils are red, and I thought this was safe.

But he held his right hand out with a flourish. "I've been writing with a fountain pen," he said in deep disgust and turned his back on me.

But the next moment he had run to the washstand and pulled it out from the wall. Behind it, where it had fallen, lay a towel covered with stains as if some one had wiped bloody hands on it. He held it up, his face working with excitement. I could only cover my eyes.

"This looks better," he said and began making a quick search of the room, running from one piece of furniture to another, pulling out bureau drawers, drawing the bed out from the wall and crawling along the baseboard with a lighted match in his hand. He gave a shout of triumph finally and reappeared from behind the bed with the broken end of my knife in his hand.

"Very clumsy," he said; "very clumsy. Peter, the dog, could have done better."

I had been examining the wall paper about the washstand. Among the ink spots were one or two reddish ones that made me shiver. And seeing a scrap of note paper stuck between the base board and the wall I dug it out with a hairpin and threw it into the grate, to be burned later. It was by the merest chance there was no fire there. The next moment Mr. Holcombe was on his knees by the fireplace reaching for the scrap.

"Never do that under such circumstances," he snapped, fishing among the ashes. "You might throw away valuable—Hello, Howell!"

I turned and saw a young man in the doorway, smiling, his hat in his hand. Even at that first glance I liked Mr. Howell, and later, when every one was against him and many curious things were developing, I stood by him through everything and even helped him to the thing he wanted more than anything else in the world. But that, of course, was later.

"What's the trouble, Holcombe?" he asked. "Hitting the trail again?"

"A very curious thing that I just happened on," said Mr. Holcombe. "Mrs. Pitman, this is Mr. Howell, of whom I spoke. Sit down, Howell, and let me read you something."

With the crumpled paper still unopened in his hand, Mr. Holcombe took his notebook and read aloud what he had written. I have it before me now: "Dog meat, $2, boat hire—that's not it. Here, 'Yesterday, Sunday, March 4, Mrs. Pitman, landlady at 42 Union street, heard two of her boarders quarreling, a man and his wife. Man's name, Philip Ladley. Wife's name, Jennie Ladley, known as Jennie Brice at the Liberty Stock company, where she has been playing small parts."

Mr. Howell nodded. "I've heard of her," he said. "Not much of an actress, I believe."

"The husband was also an actor, out of work, and employing his leisure time in writing a play."

"Everybody's doing it," said Mr. Howell idly.

"The Shuberts were to star him in this," I put in. "He said that the climax at the end of the second act—"

Mr. Holcombe shut his notebook with a snap. "After we have finished gossiping," he said, "I'll go on."

Dolly arrives at the little western hotel and secures a job as waitress. The cattle buyer also comes to the hotel, awaiting the arrival of the cattlemen with whom he expects to do business. To the hotel proprietor's wife Dolly tells her story. Two years ago her father sent her east for an education. There she met and married a young New Yorker. For this her father, who had planned that she marry another, disowned her. She soon saw that her husband was tiring of her and one night she left him. Since then by degrees, she had been working her way west.

Two gamblers discover that the cattle buyer is carrying a large roll of money. They scheme to get it. That night they issue from their room and enter another, the wrong one—Dolly's. Arthur hears her screams and comes to her aid. In the fight that ensues the two card men fall through the banisters to the lobby below, where the sheriff takes them in charge. In Arthur Dolly finds her husband and soon learns that she erred in believing he was tiring of her. The belated cattlemen arrives and, overjoyed to find in Dolly, his daughter, is only too glad to offer his forgiveness and congratulations.

Shown at the New opera house this evening.

"A Normany Romance."

Mary Pickford plays the leading part in this thrilling drama of 2 reels that will be shown at the New opera house this evening. The rapid, dramatic action of the plot is well suited to the actress's talents and makes this a very interesting reel.

"A City Elopement."
Ike, having produced the roll of money from the leg of Louise's father's trousers, rents a speedy auto mobile, and with Louise starts for the beach.
Meanwhile, father, ma and the sheriff, having extricated themselves from the roof of the hotel, start out in mad pursuit. Ike finds a notice in the paper that $100 will be given to any couple who will be married at Venice on that date. He and Louise decide that this is their chance.

The street car line running to Venice is robbed by Black Pete, a terrible bandit. The only thing of real value which the bandit procured was a silver vanity case. Leaving the scene of his crime, he runs into the road and holds up the very machine which is carrying Louise and Ike to the beach. He forces Ike to change clothes with him and attempts to get away in the machine. The nimble Ike springs on to the trunk rack at the back and the journey to the beach is continued.

Ma, pa and the sheriff, short of money, take the street car. The sheriff's hat blows out of the window and he attempts to stop the car by pulling the bell rope. He mistakes the cord and rings up several dollars on the car register. The irate conductor forcibly ejects him, also my and pa from the car.

In the loot which the bandit has thrown away is a gold-headed umbrella. The party eventually arrive at the beach and are mistaken for the robbers of the car. Ike is arrested, and put into jail with Louise. Ma is also arrested on account of having the incriminating umbrella. She sights the real bandit in Ike's clothes and denounces him to the police. Ma hikes herself to the jail and demands the release of her children. This is refused, and having knocked the guard out, she proceeds to pry the jail bars apart and rescue them.

IF KIDNEYS AND BLADDER BOTHER

Take Salts to flush Kidneys and neutralize irritating acids.

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning scalding sensation and is very pro-irritating at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse again, there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink, which quickly relieves bladder trouble.

AN ORDINANCE.

NEWEST AND MOST POWERFUL VESSEL OF JAPAN'S NAVY.
Japanese Battleship Kongo.

Tokyo, Aug. 20.—In the face of the efforts of China and the United States to bring about a peaceful settlement of the Japanese-German differences, war-like preparations are being rushed here. The army is being mobilized and the navy put in fighting shape. The Kongo is the newest and most powerful of Japan's fleet.

mediately thereafter there was put in motion those ceremonies which only mark the passing of the august head of the church. Messages went forth to all the cardinals of the crisis, to the Catholic capitals of Europe and to America.

Body Removed to Chapel.
The pope's body was removed from the death chamber to the Sistine chapel, this morning, and solemn and impressive ceremonies were conducted. huge congregations of mourners turning out.

The steps are being taken by the warring nations to assure the safe conduct of the electors to Rome to choose a successor to the dead pope.

Father Francis X. Wernz, head of the Jesuits, known as "Black Pope," died shortly after Pius X. expired.

Sketch of Pope's Life.
"It is very strange," remarked Pius X one day to a close friend in Rome, "how my life is divided into periods of nine years." He went to school at 9 years of age from the Venetian fields that were the heritage of people as "common" as himself. Nine years afterward he entered college. He was village priest for nine years and bishop of Mantua the same period. Then for another nine years he was cardinal and patriarch of Venice, at the end of that time, in 1903 being elevated to the papacy. He passed the ninth anniversary of his election only last August. His life indeed went by nines.

Was Born a Peasant.

Pope Pius X, born Joseph Sarto, came of the peasantry, seeing the light of day at Reese, in the north of Italy, June 2, 1835. His family, like all the rest of the people of the village, were poor, and it was only by the closest calculations that they were able to make both ends meet. His father, a postman, made but forty cents a day, and his mother helped out this pitifully meager wage by making dresses for her peasant acquaintances. The young Sarto suffered all the hardships of the place and time, yet rose above them all, early showing the sweetness of his nature, coupled with strength of will that gave him place in the world.

His Rise Was Steady.

His rise, despite the obstacles which confronted him at almost every step, was rapid. Early in life, the future pope attracted attention of the village priest, who saw in him more than ordinary ability. Joseph went barefooted to school to save his shoes and after four years at a seminary was sent to a higher school. His oration as a priest came at the age of 25, and he had several charges, growing in influence and importance until he was rector of the seminary, then bishop of Mantua.

A Simple Mannered Man.

In 1893 Father Sarto was made cardinal by Leo XIII, receiving San Bernardo in Rome as his titular church. When he became cardinal, he also became patriarch of Venice, an office he was filling when in 1903 he was chosen as the head of the Roman Catholic church by the sacred college.

During all these years, he was noted for his simple manner of living and his charities. The papacy was a great burden to him and he received it as a cross.

SEVERE ELECTRIC STORM VISITS TOWN AT NOONHOUR

A severe but brief electric storm visited this town at 12:30 today. A number of telephone poles were struck putting out of service electric power wires. Incidentally the mechanical department of the Clearfield Progress office was unable to resume business until nearly 3 o'clock this afternoon.

One of the employees of the electric light company was knocked down by a shock while he was in the Penn Public Service office.

Hail as large as hazelnuts fell in some parts of town during the storm.

FRENCH NOVELIST OFFERS HIS SERVICES.

Pierre Loti.

Paris, Aug. 20.—Pierre Loti, the far famed French novelist, has just offered his services to the French government. The novelist, who has already had considerable military experience, will probably be given a commission in the French army in Alsace.

positions they had occupied in Serbia after crossing the Save.

"The offensive movement of the Serbian and Montenegrin forces into Bosnia and Herzegovina continues."

Dutch Make Capture.

The Hague, Aug. 20.—The fortunes of war are exemplified in the condition of Lieut. Deceller de Moranville, son of the Belgian commander-in-chief. He wandered over the Dutch frontier and was captured by a Dutch patrol, and will now be interned until the end of the war. Like 150 Germans, among them some well known officers, he will be held a prisoner either here or at Amsterdam.

Austrian Steamer Captured.

London, Aug. 20.—A French torpedo boat destroyer yesterday captured the Austrian steamer Dinorah, loaded with wheat, of the Island of Guernsey, according to a report.

Holland Preparing for War.

Amsterdam, Aug. 20.—Holland is prepared for war. It announced its neutrality some time ago, but has mobilized its reserves and called in its officers to the colors so that it may be ready in case its neutrality will be violated.

THE EXPRESS IS IN THIS TOWN AND IN TO STAY

For Seventy-five years—three-quarters of a century—the express has been the right-hand of the shippers of Commercial America. The Express came to Clearfield, Pa., in 1869 and it came to stay. For 45 years it has been the right-hand of Commercial Clearfield, Pa.

It is here to stay. The other day when reports went out that the express companies might retire from business, a protest went up. From whom this protest—the express companies? No! The merchants of the country—shippers everywhere—petitioned Congress that no action be taken that might have the effect of forcing the express companies to retire. Commercial organizations all over the land have joined in this appeal to Washington.

For Seventy-fivyears in the past and for a good many more years in the future Express service will mean
